Facts and Figures -

Singapore's artists has been garnering acclaim overseas, making considerable headway in the international arts scene. Contemporary artists such as Ming Wong had received a Special Mention Award at the Venice Biennale 2009, being the first award for Singapore; Charles Lim was also given a Special Mention for his work at the Venice Film Festival in 2011; and June Yap was selected to be the first curator for the Guggenheim UBS MAP Global Art Initiative in 2012.

The Dance industry in Singapore is increasingly vibrant with various dance groups, collectives and independent artists performing in a wide variety of genres. In just less than a decade, the number of dance performances have increased three-fold from 500 to 1500. There are over 50 dance companies, institutions and societies in Singapore currently, including a growing pool of independent dance artists.

The local Music scene, comprising professionals, community groups, and student participants observed significant growth in recent years. The Singapore Symphony Orchestra, Singapore's leading professional symphonic orchestra, plays over 100 well-attended concerts annually, and Wind Bands are common Co-Curricular Activity groups in our schools. In addition, there are over 40 Chinese choral groups, 15 Western choral groups, and 200 school choirs currently.

The local Traditional Arts scene is lively, with more than 1,400 performances and other community engagement activities held yearly. There are more than 100 active Traditional Arts groups being supported by the National Arts Council (NAC). Singapore also saw an increasing number of young practitioners in traditional dance and music in recent years.
